CREDIT HOUSE PLAN READY SAYS PREMIER

Announcement that "credit houses" would be set up throughout the province "within the next week or ten days" was made by Premier William Aberhart when he spoke at the Calgary Prophetic Bible Institute Sunday afternoon.

Without giving any detailed information about how the credit houses would be operated, the premier stated that the plan would allow the farmers to get some form of "bonus" on wheat and livestock sold. He expressed the hope that citizens, merchants and wholesalers would support the government in the introduction of credit houses.

"Within the next week or ten days we shall have our branch credit houses set up and they will be handled on a similar basis to the credit unions set up.

"The introduction of the set up will be of necessity, gradual, on account of the additional handicaps under which we have to work. Our people are well aware that the laws of our country have been printed carefully to protect the money monopolists. Any legislation we have attempted to secure for these people has been disallowed. We are told that other acts will be treated likewise if we proceed. Fortunately this has not baffled our government.

"We shall teach our people how to deliver themselves in a practical manner by increasing their purchasing power.

"Our scheme will make it possible for farmers to secure a bonus on the sale of a part of their grain and cattle while at the same time, it will provide for the advancement of Alberta-made goods. We are determined to lower the cost of living. We are determined to give our Alberta producers an advantage that will give them greater prosperity," he said.

The World of Wheat

By H. G. L. STRANGE
Director, Research Department
Saskia Grain Company Limited

The shadow of "The Four Horsemen" of the Apocalypse is falling upon us. The chargers are being groomed, saddled and equipped to spread war, hunger, death and destruction.

Should these evil forces be loosed, then the young men, under flying banners and to the strains of martial music, will march bravely to battle. But soon they will find that their flesh is but a poor shield against hurtling, jagged steel splinters. They will know the hard choking and blinded death from poison gas. They will experience the gripping dry-throated ghastly fear as their companions before their eyes become piles of torn and shattered flesh and bone. They will see once happy homes and gardens made into heaps of muck and rubble.

At home little children will tell, with pride, of the brave deeds of their gallant soldier fathers, but in quiet places dry-eyed gentle women will mourn their lost men, and will look to a future shattered and empty of hope.

Finally when "The Captains and the Kings depart," there will limp pathetically across the country the burnt-out veteran, trying in vain to reimagine himself in a busy world that somehow has forgotten him. Then for farmers the aftermath of low prices, "A measure of wheat and three measures of barley for a penny," the Scriptures tell us.

Yet throughout the ages has ever rolled the clear but unheeded injunction to man—Share the fruits of your toil and of your lands freely with those in need—or suffer war.

How sad, how pathetic, how stupid it all is.

POOR MAN'S GOLD

COURTNEY RYLEY COOPER

The days were growing longer. Spring already had arrived in climates farther south; summer was on the way. But up here, everything remained under a burden of white. Hammond glanced far to the right.

"One less moose," he said. "There's Olsen with a supply of meat! The pack that man can carry."

They watched him angle across the drifts toward the main trail, his rifle dragging, the hind quarters of an Alaskan moose on his back.

"Think I'll go beg some of that," McKennie Joe said. "The way those wild men are coming into this country, there won't be a lot of game left."

"Get an extra piece, will you?"

"Sure. For that girl?" McKennie Joe started away. "Guess you're right—guess she's just like the rest of us—tired of her own grub and fed up with the stuff they hand out at the Slunglunion."

Soon McKennie Joe, two great hunks of moose meat freezing in his grasp, halted beside his partner.

"Well, here's the meat and there's the last of the snow burners," he said. "Sergeant Terry came along with 'em. Breakup's hit below. Wet snow most of the way until the last 40 or 50 miles."

Hammond took the unwrapped meat and started away. His course led through a maze of tents, dog huts, dirty snow piles, hastily shoveled away to reveal the foundation for a moss-chinked cabin or shack and uprisings of new buildings, the latter an output from a portable sawmill brought in over the snow. At last, he sighted a tiny log cabin; he and Joe had built it for Jeanne Towers. Then he saw the girl.

She broke from the door at his approach, running, almost sprawling

Hammond laughed.

"Always check up on the fellow who's made the strike?"

"Certainly—first job of a good geologist."

"You know your mining, eh?" Jack jerked his head. "My cabin's right here. Walk over?"

"Glad to," Kenning answered.

"Fine. I've a drop or two of Scotch left." Impulsively he laid a hand on the shoulder of Jeanne Towers, as she took the moose meat he had brought her. "You'd better sharpen up your pencil and see what you're going to buy for your store when break-up comes."

"But I wanted to pay you—"

"That can wait." He patted her shoulder again. Still somewhat dazed by sudden wealth Jeanne Towers replied, "No." This was news. "Why?"

"Turned to her cabin," Hammond caught eagerly at his companion's arm.

"Listen," he said. "I can't wait. Tell me all about Kay. Is she well? Is she coming up here? Did she really mean it—you know—treating me like she cared something about me?"

Weeks later, he still was asking the same questions. He and Kenning stood on a side hill, where forget-me-nots bloomed at the edge of retreating drifts, and the blue of lupin contrasted with the first buds of mountain rhododendron.

Spring had come as if a book had been opened and a chapter turned. The streams, only ten days before constricted by mounds of ice, now roared to the outpouring of a thousand mountain slides. Every gully contributed its rivulets, every rock slide, sprayed a plumelike waterfall. Below in the village, the sound of hammers echoed endlessly. With waters at flood stage, hatching much of the gold-seeking, the thoughts of a new civilization had turned to building. That is why Hammond and Kenning had come up here on the hill. Back of them stood a new cabin—the one Hammond had promised Kay Joyce he would build for her.

"Great view from up here," Kenning said at last.

They could look down on the big lake; a moose feeding in a far-away shallow bay, a few miners fishing in the clear water just off the inlet.

"You can't kick on the one you get from your place," Hammond answered. Kenning had built his cabin on the next hill.

They went there for a drink, the last of Kenning's supply. Then, with another prideful survey of Kay's house, Hammond dropped down the hill. At last, he walked through the lush grass along the bubbling course of Leon creek and toward Jeanne's tiny store. She was alone there.

He paused at the door to watch her, sitting on a rough bench. Then she noticed Hammond's presence, and with a quick smile disengaged herself.

"Hello!" she said. It was a welcome, a greeting and an obsequious all in one.

"Hello," he answered casually. "Still got your two hundred dollars?"

"Oh, I've hidden it." Then, "You missed the excitement. Sergeant Terry just got a customer for the new jail."

"Oh, that Jorgenson fellow. He got in a fight with his wife. He must have beaten her up terribly."

"Too bad. She complained, eh?" Jeanne shook her head.

"No—she stood for it. Somebody else told Terry. Her kind is always afraid to complain. People say they're not married."

Jack laughed.

"Well, she's lucky at that. Not being tied to him."

Jeanne came forward and leaned against the door. The brightness was gone temporarily from her features, she looked thoughtfully toward the new, raw camp.

"Oh, I don't know, Jack. Sometimes a woman who isn't married is tied tighter to a man than if she were his wife. You see, she hasn't anything else—she lost it when she went with him. Maybe that's why she stands for so much—"

She halted suddenly and attentively turned her head upward. "What's that?"

"Sounds like a motor boat. It couldn't be—"

Then a faint shout came from far away. It was picked up by a dozen voices. The fishermen, down at the inlet, cried out—faintly, Jack caught the words:

"Airplane! Airplane coming! There's an airplane!"

Doors were banging as Jeanne and Hammond ran from the store. Everyone was running, for that matter, or standing, hands over eyes. Far down the valley, where Lake Sapphire merged with the sky, a great, wide-winged bird was limned against the sunset, moving swiftly into sharper delineation.

It circled the town and travelled far down the lake, dropping lower, lower. At last, with its trailing edge flaps cutting down its speed, it slipped still nearer the lake; its engine snarled anew, and cut off again. Spray scattered like plumes of jetting steam from its pontoons; twisting and splashing, it skipped the water in great leaps, settled again, plunged onward; then, with the engine roaring anew, began to taxi toward shore.

Men ran into the marshy shallows to greet it, pawing wildly about, then wading, frantically to get out of its way. The pilot rose in his cockpit, to motion furiously, warning excited watchers against the danger of the propeller. Jack Hammond gave an exultant shout. He leaped from the side of Jeanne Towers and splashed into the water without even feeling it.

"Hello, Timmy!" he yelled. "You made it, Timmy!"

The man in the cockpit, veering from side to side as he watched the water depths about him, raised a hand in answer, then swiftly returned to his task.

Now Jack could see the cabin windows. Two persons were inside; Hammond saw that Kay was one of them. He cupped his hands to his mouth and shouted at the height of his lungs. He jumped up and down in the water until he was dripping. He waved his arms. He jerked off his hat and threw it at the cabin door—at last it opened.

Are Not Always Given To Papers

Just For Publicity

A lady had some visitors in her home but she did not want any mention of it made in the paper. She did not like publicity in any way; it seemed to her it was a little too much like parading the affairs of the home before the whole community. If some person had come to visit at her home then it was purely a family affair and not something in which the public would be interested. There are some people who look at the thing that way, but there are others who do not. Here is a little actual experience: "When I had visitors at my home I made sure there was a notice in the paper saying who they were and where they were staying. They had lived here a number of years before and there were people in the city whom I knew they would like to meet again and who were as much interested in them as I was. That little item in the paper did exactly what I hoped for. People knew at once how I felt and their friends were here and knew where they were staying. The result was they met a great many people whom they were delighted to see and the visitors had a much better time than if we had tried to look after them ourselves."

Now then—don't you think the second lady had a broader and a more useful view than the first one?—

Soldier Was Smart

Figured He Could Use Same Theory

As Sentry

At Camp Borden, Ont., when a bridge was "blown" to bits in front of advancing infantry in Canadian army manoeuvres, umpires ruled that aircraft had made a direct hit and a sentry was posted to advise soldiers to cross the river in some other manner than by the bridge.

Finally a tired infantryman, loaded with field equipment, arrived and started across the bridge.

"Hey," called the sentry, "you can't cross here. There is no bridge. Theoretically it has been destroyed."

The infantryman hesitated only a moment. "Think nothing of it, buddy. Theoretically I'm swimming the river."

Painting Was Perfect

Apples Looked So Lifelike Hats Tried To Eat It

Royal C. Steadman, the man who for 25 years has made models and pictures for the U.S. Department of Agriculture files and bulletins, said that one of his paintings was so lifelike it fooled even the rats. "I finished a painting of an apple, out in half and showing seeds exposed," Steadman said. "I put it on a window sill to dry. The next morning I found it on the floor with tracks of rats over it and the painted seeds eaten off."

Britain And U.S. Set Good Example To European Leaders

Joseph Kennedy, United States ambassador, gave Europe's leaders a tip—to follow the example of Great Britain and the United States in settling their differences.

His expressed confidence that Anglo-American devotion to the principle of "good natured settlement" would "keep us out of war."

The ambassador spoke at a luncheon preceding a ceremony at the Cathedral of Aberdeen.

His reference was to settlement of British and American claims over Canton and Enderbury Islands in the South Pacific by which both countries decided to use them in common.

"Fighting, whether called war or not, and threats of fighting come from the impatience and inability of leaders to work out pacific settlements," he said.

"We believe we have just witnessed an example of good-natured settlement of a profound difference of opinion between Great Britain and the United States—a cameo of what world settlement might be if the same intelligent good-neighbourliness were always exhibited by different nations."

Just As A Protection

Any Horse Sides When It Sees A Lurking Danger

Our Dumb Animals says horses, dependent on fleet-footedness for safety, were creatures of the plains. They hold their heads high so they can be on their feet instantly, ready to race away. A horse still shies because, in the wild, many enemies lurked in roadside herbage. When it lies at rest, it does so facing the probable point of danger, and rises on its front feet first, that it may more easily discover it. A colt takes its nourishment in small doses, never gorging, ready to run at a moment's warning.

Cause Of Crash

Failure Of Wing Tip Responsible For Plane Accident

Failure of the right wing tip of the aerobus was the cause of a crash at Yorkton, Sask., on May 28, in which E. L. Fletcher, pilot, and David Downs, pupil, lost their lives. A board of inquiry has reported to Hon. C. D. Howe, minister of transport.

The board found the wing tip failed while the machine was being manoeuvred out of a steep spiral, following a spin or a steep spiral, and that the whole wing subsequently collapsed, making the aircraft completely uncontrollable.

An examination of the broken pieces of wing, the report said, indicated the main structural members were of sound material. The evidence indicated the original cause of the failure was the breaking of the drag bracing wires.

Trick of Magician

Catches Bullet, Fired From Rifle, In His Mouth

Pid Paff Poofers from Canada and the United States closed a three-day convention at Port Erie, Ont., with Magician Ted Anneman, New York, mystifying a crowd of 1,000 by apparently catching a rifle bullet in his mouth.

Police Chief Andrew Griffin marked the bullet and later identified the slug which Anneman spit out after a British army rifle was fired at the magician's open mouth from a distance of about 40 feet.

The Pid Paff Poofers, a group of amateur and professional magicians, meet each year to exchange tricks.

Placer Gold In Yukon

Total Production Last Year Was Valued At $2,042,000

Placer gold mining in the unglaciated areas of Yukon shows promise of continuing as an important industry for at least another 50 years, according to the Department of Mines and Resources, Ottawa. The Klondike district, chief Canadian source of placer gold, and the main field in the unglaciated area, alone contains sufficient proved reserves to keep most of the dredges now operating, or under construction in operation for more than 15 years.

Development along modern engineering lines is showing that the Klondike contains much larger reserves of placer gravels than was formerly regarded as probable, and large areas of probable and possible gravels still remain to be tested. Total placer gold production in Yukon in 1937 was 58,348 fine ounces valued at $2,042,000, and the total value of all mineral production from the Territory to the end of 1937 is $215,544,000, of which $192,500,000 represents the value of gold production.

Are Expert Swimmers

Phalaropes Have Characteristics Different From Other Canadian Shore Birds

The Canadian Resources Bulletin says phalaropes, which are among the most delightful of Canadian shore birds have some unusual characteristics. First they differ from most other shore birds in being expert swimmers.

The second unusual feature about phalaropes is their home life. The female phalarope takes the initiative in courting rites, and makes the first advance toward the shy and modestly colored prospective mate. The females are larger, handsomer, and wear brighter plumage than the males.

After Mrs. Phalarope lays her eggs, madden betakes herself to pursue her favorite pastimes, more than often to join other ladies of leisure of her own kind in small sociable flocks, while the obedient and faithful Mr. Phalarope incubates the eggs and shoulders practically all of the cares and worries of the household.

Plans being made for the new stadium in Nuremberg, Germany, call for a seating capacity of 400,000, making it the largest in the world.

Probably the greatest danger facing many people to-day is not so much the danger that they will do something wrong as the danger that they will fail to do something right.
